

Practitioner Corner:

The Power of Action

by Susana Sorí

I have always been driven to action. Action as play and entertainment; action as learning; action as commitment and duty. Yet, the greatest reason for action in my life is using action to break through the energy of fear and 'imagined' limitation.

Recently, a few days after completing a session for a client, she wrote:

"When I heard about the positive action I was to do after my session, I was lit! I was so excited and happy. Then, a week later, I was feeling sad and resistant to the idea that a positive action would solve my issues and make me happy. I got madder and madder at myself and finally refused to do it. I just don't believe in it. I do not believe that there is a single act (positive action or not) that I can do that will change my fate or will make a positive difference in my life. I do not want to create an expectation inside myself just to be disappointed once more."

Like this client, there are times when many of us feel stuck and, for good reason, we do not feel like anything we do can move us forward. Here is my response:

"I understand that you were feeling good about doing your positive action and then, as the time approached, you felt sad and then angry at yourself. You wrote that you do not believe in doing "positive actions" and that coming from your sense of honesty, do not believe that creating a mind belief (positive or otherwise) will affect your future outcomes. That is a valid choice, and if this is what you believe, I honor it."

I would however, like to say some things about 'positive actions' that have not been mentioned... the practical level - nothing mysterious.

Positive Actions have a very practical level - nothing mysterious.

It is my experience that most of the time, we do not shift, change, grow or move past our limitations by just thinking about our issues, discussing them or sharing them with others, even counselors. This is often because in the process of going to these places, we make these issues so important that we have difficulty letting them go.

It is difficult to move forward if we are constantly looking back.

What I find useful and have seen demonstrated time and again, is the power of action, of effort, of doing work. When a person takes even a small step beyond their limiting belief, for example, they begin to destroy that limitation. It is by doing the action, taking the step, expressing the intention and taking one's power by one's own will that one achieves this. This is not magic. This is not trying to alter destiny by snapping one's fingers. It is not about expectations. What it IS, is a bridge. A bridge that allows one's self to take a step across of what holds one back, and the result is transformation, a new freedom, a new choice. Crossing this bridge is accomplished through both effort and intention coming together. This is what a "positive action" is all about.

Practitioner Corner:

The Power of Action

It is my experience, and that of my clients, that as we change, learn and transform, action does affect our destiny, even if it is 'only' at the level of how we respond and therefore how we experience what happens to us.

When we choose change (by doing the positive action) we may be excited. Then, as we move towards it, our old patterns, limiting beliefs and fears can overwhelm and paralyze us. This is an important moment of awareness.

...This is exactly the moment we must choose to own our step forward.

This IS the crisis point, the bridge, which we must cross if we are to step forward into change.

Copyright © 2006 by Susana Sorí.
All rights reserved.

Susana Sorí is a Shaman in the Q'ero healing tradition of the High Andes with a Master Certification in Luminous Healing and Energy Medicine and advanced certification Resonance Repatterning®, Meditation, Yoga and Pranayama. She is founder and facilitator of the Resonance Repatterning 'World Peace Project' and member of the Society for Shamanic Practitioners. Susana is an exhibiting artist whose work is in permanent collections of several national museums. She is currently engaged in writing two books: one on the power of the breath and the other on transformation.

Contact Susana: susana@hrshaman.com

Learn more about her services:

www.hrshaman.com

Susana will be holding a variety courses this fall at the Alchemical University. We invite you to meet her at an Alchemical Courtyard community open house on September 25, 2008, at 7pm. There will be a viewing of major excerpts from the film 2001: The Odyssey, followed by a lively discussion and Q & A with Susana.